Updates from the Field

PDC Summit draws thousands

About 3,000 people are in Orlando this week for the International Summit & Exhibition on Health Facility Planning, Design & Construction (PDC Summit). If you couldn't make it to Orlando, you can still take advantage of the education offered at the PDC Summit. ASHE members will have free On Demand access to several session recording in coming weeks, and expanded conference recordings are also available for purchase. Watch the ASHE Insider weekly newsletter for information on when recordings are available.

PDC story on young professionals

Students from around the country participated in a planning and design challenge at the PDC Summit. The AIA/AAH PDC Student Challenge pairs architecture, engineering, and construction management students from different universities together on a project team. Each team has just three days to plan a design charrette meeting project requirements before being judged by a panel of experts. The competition is one way AIA and ASHE are working to engage the next generation of planning, design, and construction professionals.

Apply now for Annual Conference scholarships

ASHE is now accepting applications for the Isle B. Almanza Scholarship, which provides recipients with $2,000 to help cover registration and travel fees for the ASHE Annual Conference.
